

CURATED COMMERCE · CONCEPT

One aesthetic, every brand

A shopping app organized around a look, not a store — curating real pieces from many brands into one cohesive, on-palette feed. Product brief, personas, PRD, hypotheses, and two working prototypes.

THE EDIT · WORKING TITLE · DIYA

People shop by aesthetic. They can't buy that way.

Shoppers find a look on Pinterest and TikTok — "soft romance," "quiet utility" — but to actually assemble it they bounce between ten brand sites, a resale app, and twenty screenshots, then eyeball whether it all hangs together.

The inspiration lives in one place. The buying is scattered everywhere. The result: a camera roll full of wants and a wardrobe full of one-offs that don't talk to each other.

Nobody owns this. Retailer apps are single-brand. Marketplaces sort by brand and category, not by look. Pinterest curates beautifully but sells nothing.

Pick a look. Shop it across every brand.

The app curates real pieces from many brands into one cohesive, on-palette feed. Save to mood boards, filter by color, follow a brand shelf, catch price drops. The curation — keeping the mix cohesive across brands — is the product.

"Pinterest you can actually shop — one aesthetic, every brand."

Palette filter

Mood boards

More-like-this

Brand shelf & follow

Price drops

Feed-curator agent

The core bet: if we curate cross-brand pieces into looks that feel genuinely cohesive, people will shop by aesthetic here instead of stitching it together across ten apps.

Three shoppers, one shared job

Maya

THE AESTHETIC CURATOR • 24

Has a defined look and protects it. Builds a wardrobe piece by piece and wants everything to go together.

"I want to shop a look across brands in one place, so I build a wardrobe that actually goes together."

Priya

DEAL-SMART TREND FOLLOWER • 20

Loves fashion on a student budget. Saves pieces and waits for the price to drop.

"I want to be alerted the moment a saved piece drops, so I buy without overpaying or missing it."

Sam

TIME-POOR MINIMALIST • 31

Wants to look put-together with minimal effort. Shops to solve a gap, fast and decisively.

"I want a short, cohesive set chosen for me, so I can decide fast and move on."

We knowingly don't build for the bargain maximizer who wants the cheapest trend piece — serving them would turn us into a discount aggregator and kill the taste that makes us different.

A fully interactive app, two aesthetics

Both directions are live: Muse (Soft Romance) and STACK (Quiet Utility). Palette filters, category chips, search, product detail with "more like this," save-to-board, create board, brand shelf with follow, and price drops — all working.

Built as a single self-contained file that runs in any browser, no setup.

The feed-curator agent

Give it a brief — aesthetic, palette, budget, occasion. It reasons out loud, then assembles a cohesive, on-budget, multi-brand look and explains its picks.

This is the product's agentic shape in one tool: a configurable goal, a planning agent, a multi-modal result, adapting on feedback.

One agentic shape, one North Star

North Star: cohesive looks saved and shopped.

The PRD traces 10 epics to three opportunities: see a look that's already mine · hold it together over time · act on it and let us earn. Every feature is tagged already-prototyped vs. net-new, each with a pass/fail acceptance bar.

Two questions decide everything

#	BELIEF (FALSIFIABLE)	CHEAP TEST	TIME · COST
H1	People want to shop by aesthetic, across brands	Fake-door landing page	2–4 d · ~$100
H2	Cohesion is the value: curated beats a plain feed	Curated vs. shuffled prototype test	3–5 d · ~$0
H5	We can curate cohesive feeds at scale (agent)	Blind agent-vs-human rating	2–3 d · ~$0
H3 · H4 · H6	Outbound buying · retention · brand supply	Painted-door · concierge alerts · desk research	days · low

H1 and H2 are existential — if either is false, the product doesn't exist. Both are answerable in under a week for ~$100, using the prototype and a landing page we already have most of.

Done, and what's next

DONE

- ✓ Product brief, personas, PRD, hypotheses
- ✓ Visual prototype — clickable, two aesthetics
- ✓ Working feed-curator agent

NEXT

- Run H1 + H2 — landing page + curated-vs-plain test
- Lock the product name (placeholder: "The Edit")
- Decide launch curation: hand vs. agent
- Affiliate desk research for a real catalog

The ask: greenlight a one-week, ~$100 test of the two existential hypotheses before any production build.